PREFACE.

THIS work was commenced several years ago, with sole reference to communicating by Magnetic Telegraph. It has, however, been essentially modified since the reduction of letter postage, and is now designed to be used as much for communicating through the Mail, as by Telegraph.

The utility of this book will appear by its securing the following advantages:

I. FACILITY OF COMMUNICATION.

A letter, or card, containing all the most important and common-place information that travelers wish to communicate to their anxious friends, which, if written out in full, would fill half a sheet or more, can be prepared in the Cars, on the Boat, or in almost any circumstances, (not excepting a bed of sickness,) in a few moments, and with little effort. Take the following as an illustration, purporting to be a journal written by a lady on her way from Boston to New York.

This card contains the following, as will be seen by referring to the corresponding numbers of the book.

To-day left Boston for New York at half past seven o'clock in the morning, and am now on the cars for Springfield, at which place, unless accidentally detained, we shall arrive by eleven o'clock forty-five minutes. I am happy to meet several acquaintances on board, which renders it very pleasant. I have been introduced to Mr. John Smith, who politely takes me under his protection as far as Hartford. I was agreeably surprised to meet on board the cars my old friend, Mrs. Jones, who will accompany me as far as Brookfield. We are honored by having as fellow passenger, a no less distinguished personage than Frank Pierce. I am in one of the patent ventilated cars, which in a good measure excludes the dust, but not entirely.

We are now entering the city of Springfield, at eleven o'clock forty minutes. At this place we shall exchange cars. The scenery on the banks of the river is perfectly enchanting.

Twelve o'clock. We are now on the cars for New York. We are passing through a delightful country, and the prospect is quite exhilarating.

It is now half past one o'clock, and we are at New Haven, which is a beautiful place.

Half past five o'clock. We are entering the city of New York, and I am in as good health as when I left home.

My journey has been sustained with less fatigue than was anticipated. I shall go directly to Judson's hotel. You may expect to hear from me again soon. I have not time to write any more now. Good-by.

Most truly yours.

P. S. Inquire for my parasol which I left at the Tremont House.

All this, and much more by reversing the card, can be done on the way; and however great the haste of the traveler may be, a card can be prepared and dropped into the letter-box of the cars, steamer or Post-office, or sent to the Telegraph station, without the loss of a moment of time. Thus the journal of a day's travel may be on its way home while the traveler, without stopping, continues his lightning speed in the opposite direction.

Persons unaccustomed to writing, and to whom the penning of a few lines is a great burden, will find this book an efficient aid and relief in communicating with their friends.

II. GREAT ECONOMY OF TIME AND EXPENSE IN THE USE OF THE MAGNETIC TELEGRAPH.

As a whole sentence is communicated by merely sending its number, much of the labor of the operator is saved.

Several times the amount of matter that is communicated by Telegraph in the ordinary way, can be sent at the same expense by means of this book.

Digitized by Google

III. Secret correspondence by Telegraph.

Confidential communications can be made through the Telegraph, without a possibility of their being understood, except by the parties in correspondence. The method is explained on page 12.

IV. Amusement.

Since the completion of this book, it has been suggested to the Author by a friend, that it may serve a secondary purpose of affording innocent and exciting amusement in the social circle, as a substitute for conversation-cards, etc. A little ingenuity will readily suggest a variety of methods by which the numbers may be given out and called for, either at random or selected, the blanks filled, etc., by a member, or members, of the company, producing combinations either grave or ludicrous.

The amount of labor expended in the preparation of this work, if foreseen, would have discouraged the Author at the outset; and even when half completed, he would have relinquished it had it not been for the strong conviction that it would, if properly executed, prove a great public benefit.

The plan of this book was, to the Author, entirely original; but he had not proceeded far in the execution of it, before learning that he had been anticipated in several of its leading important particulars, by HENRY J. ROGERS, Esq., of Baltimore, who had just prepared a most excellent and elaborate Telegraphic Dictionary; designed, however, more particularly for the marine service. Prof. MORSE had also suggested the idea of a book somewhat similar, to be used in connection with the Magnetic Telegraph. The Author takes pleasure in acknowledging his obligations to both of those gentlemen for their encouragement, sympathy, and valuable suggestions during the progress of this work.

The method of secret correspondence by Telegraph, in the use of a certain arithmetical number as a key, is precisely that adopted by Mr. ROGERS, and is undoubtedly the simplest and best ever devised.

Great embarrassment has been experienced in preparing the following pages, from a sense of the impossibility of anticipating the wants of every body, and the difficulty of deciding what phrases will be most needed. The work, novel in its character, and occupying an entirely new field, is submitted to the public with a confident belief that it will be found useful.

Special pains have been taken to bring the matter within such compass as to make the book not inconvenient for the pocket.

DIRECTIONS TO THOSE WHO USE THIS BOOK.

1. Be sure that your correspondent has a copy, or access to one. If necessary, send him, or her, one by mail.

2. Be careful and not mistake the numbers, and write your figures distinct and plain.

3. If there is a blank in the phrase to be filled, or a word in it you wish to change, write the word, or words, in their order on a line with the number. In some cases the substitution of a word may make bad grammar, but if the idea is plain, it is of little consequence.

4. Look for synonyms if you do not find at first what you wish.

5. Always keep in your Book a pencil, cards with a margin on both sides for numbers, and gum-sealed envelopes with postage stamps previously attached, and you will be prepared to write and send your letter in any emergency.

6. If you have a secret communication to make, agree previously with your correspondent upon a certain arithmetical number which you are to use mutually as a key to your phrase. This key is to be added or subtracted, as you may agree, to the number sent by Telegraph.

Example. Suppose you agree upon + 10 as your key; you wish to communicate secretly the phrase, numbered 748, "I wish you to attach property without delay," but you write 738, which has no reference to your business. Your correspondent adds 10, and comes at once to your true meaning.

Another method is, to use letters to represent figures, in the margin.

106. I complied with your request at . . . . .
107. I was unable to comply with your request at . . . .

---

* In filling out the card, if the thing referred to be different from that printed in the phrase, write it after the number in the same line, thus

102. Cloak.

It is now understood that a cloak and not a "trunk" was left. In like manner the meaning of any phrase in this book, may be easily modified to suit circumstances, by substituting another word for a leading one in the sentence. For example, take the phrase, No. 4761 "I wish you to hasten the business as much as possible." Let this phrase be referred to on the card thus, 4761. Retard.

This would convey a meaning directly the opposite—you wish the business retarded and not "hastened."

Other words in the same sentence may be changed thus, 4761. Goods.

You now wish your goods, and not your business hastened.

Again.

4761. A little.

You now want your business hastened somewhat, but are not as urgent as the phrase would represent you.

A word implying negation, may be applied to any positive or affirmative phrase, and entirely reverse its meaning.
